ing the pros and cons of activism, Tokyo no doubt does not see the sight of China's fighting strength. It may surprise some leaders to know that General Chiang Kai-shek, the brilliant Chinese commander who has waged several years' effective war against Japan, wrote a lack of modern equipment

He started with fifty divisions but now has over two hundred, besides about another hundred provincial ones not fully regimented with a main force but still co-operating with the latter.

Chiang Kai-shek is a Methodist like his gifted wife and all her family. He embraced Christianity three years before his marriage to "Beautiful Mood" Soong. They neither dance nor indulge in mah-jong, the national gambling game of the Chinese. In reckoning what the
